COURSE DESCRIPTIONS

International Entertainment Law / Professor Geoffrey Scott

This course explores select international legal issues that arise when representing clients in the entertainment industry – especially those in music, publishing and film. Major topics include but are not limited to: The creative personality and the creative process; cross-border acquisition of rights to literature, drama, music, art; the recognition and exploitation of celebrity interests in name and likeness; the interest of fans in celebrities and the implications of rights of privacy; reputational interests of celebrities; trademarks and the use of trade symbols and principles in entertainment; the protection of artistic expression through copyright; principles of entertainment contracts and recording agreements; barriers created by copyright and international trade laws to cross-border exploitation of music recordings, film, books, and other entertainment products; domestic content requirements, censorship, and international piracy; the cross-border collection of entertainment royalties; and matters related to professional responsibility. Cases and other legal materials to be studied include those from the United States, Canada, Australia, Great Britain, as well as the European Union.

International Art Law / Professor Henry Lydiate

Artworks reflect the cultures of their creators, but artworks themselves know no boundaries. Perhaps for this reason, the most interesting and newsworthy issues in art law today are international law issues. This course will address international legal issues related to art as a creative endeavor, art as an article of commerce, and art as a significant cultural artifact. Issues to be examined include: the moral rights of artists; international copyright (and other) protections for artists and their work; legal aspects of international art loans and consignments; export and import control laws designed to prevent the cross-border shipment of culturally significant artworks; and the recovery of stolen artworks, especially those plundered during wartime, including statutes that prevent the seizure of artworks from non-profit museums, in order to encourage international art loans, even if the artworks were stolen or illegally exported.

Comparative Media Law / Professor RonNell Anderson Jones

This course explores the timely and controversial topic of the intersection of media and the law, focusing on the impact that the law has upon the press as it gathers information and publishes the news. Students will become familiar with U.S. cases addressing the issues of libel, appropriation, public information, reporter's privilege, and access to criminal proceedings. Students will also consider recent attacks on the press from top political officials and will debate the ways in which shifts in media behavior and changes in public sentiment have emboldened these attacks. Using British law as a point of comparison, students will investigate different legal approaches that can be employed in a free and democratic society for balancing the interests of government openness and press freedom with countervailing interests in ensuring privacy, protecting individual reputation, and guaranteeing fair trials.

Negotiating and Drafting International Entertainment Contracts / Professors Jay Gendron & Orly Ravid '14

The initial part of this course will provide students with the opportunity to learn negotiation principles, techniques and tactics prior to negotiating a television actor agreement with other students in the class. Immigration and talent guild jurisdictional requirements will also be covered as they relate to the negotiation of the actor deal. Students will be asked to draft a deal memo outlining the terms of the deal. The deal memos will be reviewed and compared to those of the other negotiation teams in the class. The subsequent part of the course will entail studying an overview of the entertainment industry landscape with respect to deal-making and contract drafting. Students will review real world entertainment contracts from studio forms to independent agreements relating to film, television/series, and music licensing. The course will explore best practices in drafting contract language in any context and as applied to entertainment agreements. Students will also learn fundamentals of managing clients and opposing parties in connection with negotiating, drafting, and finalizing entertainment contracts. Students will participate in drafting exercises with consistent instructor feedback.
