

Lua Kamál Yuille

Lua Kamál Yuille is an interdisciplinary scholar whose current work engages property theory, business law, heterodox economics, critical pedagogy, and group identity. Professor Yuille's diverse professional praxis—federal law clerk, Latin Americanist socio-economic development lawyer, Wall Street corporate transactional attorney, public school teacher, pro bono immigration litigation practitioner—provides a strong foundation for her engaged scholarship on a wide range of questions. Her recent projects include studies of the economics and pedagogy of street gang identity and control mechanisms, corporate personality, and contemporary private property. She has also written about and studied U.S. immigration and asylum law, the European Union, law and religion, law and economics, employment discrimination, and jurisprudence. She holds a dual appointment at Northeastern University in the School of Law and the D'Amore-McKim School of Business and is affiliated with the University of Kansas School of Law.
