

Maya Valree

Maya Valree is a Policy Analyst at The Education Trust–West (ETW), a research, policy, and advocacy organization committed to advancing policies and practices to dismantle the racial and economic barriers embedded in California’s education system. In this role, Maya supports the organization's policy research and analysis in the area of parenting students in California higher education systems and schools. Before joining ETW, Maya worked as the graduate student coordinator for the Students with Dependents program at California Polytechnic State University, San Luis Obispo, where she engaged campus and community stakeholders to increase programming and institutional support for parenting students. Maya is an active board member of Project Self Sufficiency, a nonprofit organization dedicated to helping low-income single parents graduate from college or vocational training with the skills necessary to achieve economic independence.

Maya takes immense pride in her educational journey, having earned an A.A. in Public Policy from Santa Monica College, a B.A. in Sociology from the University of California, Irvine, and an M.S. in Higher Education Counseling & Student Affairs from California Polytechnic State University, San Luis Obispo.
