Entertainment Institute

Southwestern Law School's Biederman Institute is a leading academic center for the study of entertainment, media, the arts, and sports law. The Institute trains students to become excellent and creative lawyers through rigorous and unique courses, programs, externships, clinical experiences, and other opportunities. Working with a law student population that is more than fifty percent racially and ethnically diverse, the Institute is a pipeline to diversify the legal profession and entertainment industry. The Institute actively seeks opportunities to advance social justice. Institute professors publish in leading journals, write books, and present at conferences around the world.

Entertainment & the Arts Clinic

Through the Entertainment & the Arts Legal Clinic, the Institute serves and advocates for talent, writers, composers, producers, directors, rights-holders, and others who seek legal assistance with their creative projects and affords students unique, hands-on opportunities to develop critical lawyering skills. The Clinic serves approximately 30 clients each semester and has handled hundreds of matters since its 2012 inception. Clinic projects include documentaries such as Mission Joy (Tribeca Film Festival/Netflix), Pay or Die (SXSW/Paramount+), Holding Liat (Berlinale (Winner), Oscars 2026 shortlist), Barbara Forever (Sundance 2026), subject of Soul Patrol (Sundance 2026), and How to Sue the Klan (Pan African Film Festival), numerous scripted fiction films, and a podcast.
